

STOP THE BUILDING!

A TIDAL WAVE of development is wrecking hundreds of villages and market towns. A flood of concrete is destroying thousands of acres of prime farmland, beauty spots and the habitats of rare and endangered wildlife.

What is planned around here is only a small part of the big picture. Up to 1,000 square miles of virgin countryside are to be bulldozed to make way for an official target of 4.4 million new homes by the year 2016.

In fact, it's going to be even worse than that! The 4.4 million figure was decided on by the Conservatives before the last general election, but Labour Government planners are now working on a revised figure of 5.5 million new houses. That means that even more of our heritage is going to be destroyed. In the words of Labour planning minister, Richard Caborn: "The green belt is up for grabs."

The worst thing of all is that the resulting destruction of rural communities, wildlife and farmland is totally unnecessary. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of derelict land in and around Britain's cities and big towns. If this land were redeveloped, there would be plenty of new homes, and none of the extra traffic jams and pollution which will be caused by people commuting from new dormitory towns into the cities.

But reclaiming urban wasteland is less profitable than bulldozing our countryside, so the politicians — councillors and MPs alike — get big back-handers from the developers and construction companies in return for allowing them to concrete over fields, woods and villages.

That's why the only way to stop the building is to throw out the old politicians.

If you agree that it's time to take action to preserve Britain's countryside, then you've got to help to build a completely new political force, which is pledged to put the interests of the British people as a whole before those of greedy developers or bought-and-paid-for politicians.

THE CEMENT-MIXER'S MOTOR

WITH AN average of fewer than 1.8 children per couple, the numbers of the native British population are actually falling. So why do we need all the extra houses?

The official story is that it is because of the increasing number of people who live alone, particularly as a result of the rising divorce rate. But if there is a shortage of housing for those people, the answer is to build large numbers of affordable one-bedroom flats on reclaimed land in the cities and big towns where they live at present, not to build expensive three-bedroomed houses all over what's left of our countryside!

No! The real reason for the building blight is that Britain's population is growing because of continued mass immigration, and because of the high birthrate of the immigrant communities already here. Not only do all those extra people have to be housed, but 'white flight' from cities dominated by foreign cultures and attitudes is the big, unspoken, reason why so many people want to move out to new developments in rural areas.

These facts are well-known by the planners and politicians, but multiculturalism is a sacred cow these days. They'd rather pour concrete all over rural Britain than stop immigration. The Economic & Social Research Council has admitted that:-

"Annual net additions to the population (including some but not all asylum claimants) from international migration rose from an estimated 35,000 in 1992 to 109,000 in 1995 — a net addition of 647,000 people in the decade. This is a substantial contribution to population and household growth (immigration is partly behind the famous increase of projected households to 4.4 million)."

When you consider that the figures above don't even include all asylum-seekers, let alone any of the huge number of illegal immigrants, you'll begin to see why we can't possibly save our countryside from the cement-mixers without dealing with the problem of immigration!
